

Apert

The small child in his pushchair, head as wide as his body,
fingers fused as a meat mitten, kicked his little long legs and cried.

His mother,
drained to drab,
as in a trance,
gently wiped away the tears
that fell from his bright blue,
beautiful,
displaced eyes.